When President Obama was inaugurated in January, leaders worldwide were asking what kind of impact his administration would have on their businesses. Now six months into serving his first year, our editors will examine the moves Obama has made so far and what's next on his agenda.

Faced with uncertain financial markets, storied corporate failures, and high unemployment levels, Obama's actions and policies have the power to change the game for all who are in it. How is increased spending on health care spurring innovations in technology? What will the new focus on the environment mean for investors and energy companies alike? BusinessWeek will survey the business landscape and explore opportunities and risks at home and abroad.

Leverage our connection to global business decision makers by being part of this important Special Report.
